BACKGROUND

Indonesia has graduated from a low-income country to a middle-income country in the 1990s. Aside from the 1998 Asian financial crisis, Indonesian economy performed quite well and Indonesia was one of the top performers in the region. Indonesia also managed stable economic growth post the 1998 crisis. For example, in the past 5 years, economic and investment growth has been hovering around 5%. In the 2020-2024 mid- and long-term development plan, the government is aiming an economic growth of 6% in the optimistic phase. The key question is, how can Indonesia sustain a high economic growth?

Modern economic growth models suggest that human capital (Heckman, Lochner, and Taber, 1998; Manuelli and Seshadri, 2006; Lucas, 1988; Acemoglu and Angrist, 2000, Aghion, Howitt, and Violante, 2004) and institutions (Alesina and Rodrik, 1994; Persson and Tabellini, 1994; Forbes, 2000; Banerjee and Duflo, 2003; Saint-Paul and Verdier, 1993; Benabou, 2000) are two important drivers of economic growth. The Indonesian government has been quite consistent in its commitment to nurturing quality and competitive human capital development and institutional strengthening. For example, the government is ever committed in providing 20% of total annual budget for education spending. Education spending was Rp390 trillion in 2015, and it increased to Rp505 trillion in 2020.

Challenges still remain. Stunting rate remains stubbornly high and educational outcomes are relatively low in comparison to other countries in the region. Youth unemployment and youth NEET is one of the highest in the region, and intensive efforts to reform labor market regulations are needed. Property rights protection is still an issue in Indonesia and Ease of Doing Business Index is still lower than Vietnam and Malaysia.

Given these challenges, how can we better spend our resources to improve human capital in the country? What are the strategies to improve human capital in Indonesia? How can Indonesia improve its institutions to incentivize innovations and business creations? The 16th Indonesian

Regional Science (IRSA) International Conference aims, among others, to encourage more discussion on the current policies and programs in institutional strengthening and human capital development.

The conference will also provide opportunities for researchers all over Indonesia to present and their ideas on the topics of regional development, regional planning, industrial development, trade, institution, public finance and other development issues.

ABOUT THE IRSA INTERNATIONAL

Conference

The IRSA conference is IRSA's main annual event that promotes the advancement of research across the country. The conference will facilitate open discussions and debates, transfer of knowledge, strategies for policy formulation, and networking amongst scholars and policymakers. Each year since its establishment, the IRSA annual conference has been attended by a large number of academics and policymakers from numerous Indonesian institutions. IRSA has also created a large network of academics and policymakers who are concerned with issues of regional development. This network has now reached a critical mass that can play a major role not only in the academic arena through research and publications but also contribute to the evidence-based regional development policies nationally, regionally, and locally.
